Training goals

Upon completion of the Supervisors' Development Program (SDP), you'll be able to:

- Approach safety and health as a management process.
- Apply safety and health education and training methods that promote safe and healthful actions by employees.
- Recognize hazards in the workplace and identify ways to control them.
- Encourage communication between employees and promote employee interest and involvement in safety and health issues.

Who should attend?

Attend SDP if you are a supervisor, manager, team leader, human resource manager, or have responsibility for making improvements in the areas of safety, health and the environment.

What you'll learn

SDP has been designed to integrate safety, health, and environmental training within companies that have either traditional supervisors or newer team-based leadership positions. The program addresses safety, health, and environmental issues from the perspective of people in these roles. SDP takes an interactive approach, involving participants with lecture and discussion, case studies, readings and group exercises.

Supervisors' Development Program focuses on the identification and assessment of hazards, incident prevention, and the participant's role in the safety, health, and environmental program at their facility. Continuous emphasis is placed on how the knowledge and skills developed transfer to the participant's everyday work experiences.
